Hugmen Toss Away Many Opportunities and Allow Visitors to Tie Score With 2-Run Rally in Ninth; Defeats Kramer and Arthur Lindsey Checks New Yorkers in Final Innings

By John Kieran

For three hours and a half yesterday afternoon the Yanks and the Indians wrestled all over the Polo Grounds, using all the holds known to modern science and ancient baseball. In the thirteeath inning Tris ing Frank L. Kramer and Arthur Spen-Speaker decided that he had been around New York long enough on this cer in a one mile three cornered match trip, so he banged a double to right that put the Yanks flat on their race. backs, and the Indians were adjudged winners on the point system. cer third. Nearly thirty thousand fans filtered into the Brush Stadium before the long combat began, and most of them stuck until the last Yankee hope went down with the setting sun. It was a hard battle to lose, for opportunities to win it stuck out all over the pastime. Squire Sam Jones started in the box for the Hugmen, and was handed a substantial lead, but when he seemed in danger of sinking head foremost, he was thrown a life-preserver and pushed into the showers while Bob Shawkey took the wheel. It was from the shoots of the deep sea sailor that the Indians finally pounded out their extra-inning

The Indians started the fracas with George Uhle on the firing line, but he was bombed out of position in the fifth by a clattering home run on the part of Bob Meusel, on which three runs were chalked up. Duster Mails then obliged for a few innings, and retired in favor of a pinch hitter, where typon Tris Speaker called for Genial Jim Lindsey, who pitched the Yanks right out of the picture. This Lindsey person was what might be called good without putting any strain on the vocabulary. At several critical moments when a hit by a Hugman might have caused serious damage, not to ray devustation, the aforementioned "Genial Jim" squelched the batters with little ceremony and no mercy at all. The Yanks ran up a total of sixteen hits in registering their seven runs, but the Indians were just a little better at calling their shots, and eighteen enemy blows accounted for the ninerun damage. Squire Jones was nicked for ten hits and five runs during his stay on the mound, and Bob Shawkey gave eight hits and four runs in the later innings. Uhle was paddled for eight hits and six runs before he could find shelter. Mails was going at full speed for the time he pitched, and the Yanks got only a lone single off his delivery. A fumble by Deacon Scott, a single by Jamieson and a double by Wambsganss gave the Indians the first run of the game in the third, but the Yanks immediately bettered that mark by scoring two runs in their half of the inning on a double by Wally Schang and singles by McNally and Meusel. It nearly faded to emaciation in the sixth, when Joe Wood doubled to left and accord on a single to center by Joe Sewell. Larry Gardner followed this with a base blow to the same section, and Squire Jones was chased right off the village green. Stuffy McInnis was the first man to face Bob linawkey, and he helped matters considerably by hitting into a double play that retired the side.

Tris was allowed to drift over the pan while Ward tossed out Larry Gardner. Stuffy McInnis was up, and with the tying run on third it looked as though Stuffy might as well have been granted a pass to first, with Luke Sawell and the pitcher coming up. The younger Sewell is a nice looking boy and a pretty good catcher, but he strikes out with fervor and frequency. However, Shawkey gave McInnis a chance to hit the ball, with the result that Stuffy singled to left on the first ball pitched and the score was tied. Then came a lot of vain gestures on both sides until the fatal thirteenth, when Wamby doubled, Speaker doubled and Joe Sewell singled for a total damage of two runs and the complete ruination of an otherwise good ball game.

It was a red-letter day for the Babe, even if he didn't get one of his far-famed clouts. His skipping single in the third inning put him over the 300 mark for the first time this season. Now that he has made the grade he intends to climb considerably, as he does his best work at high altitudes.

by Steve O'Neill and Uhie. The Yanks immediately broke the tie in their turn at lest on safe blows by Ward and Scott and a wild pitch by Uhle that let Wardie scamper scross the pan. Then came the fifth, with a pleasing prospect of a four-run lead. McNally walked, Ruth singled to right and Bob Meusel plunked a home run into the upper right field stands. This was the end of Master Uhle and also the scoring for that inning. Mails came in from the bull pen and set the Yanks down in order.
